

MATCH BURGLAR SENT TO FOLSOM

James Lukan, known to the police as the "match burglar," was sentenced to from one to twenty years in Folsom prison by Superior Judge Walter Perry Johnson last Tuesday.

Lukan, who is said to have committed 250 burglaries in San Francisco, and over twenty in Daly City, during the last eight years, pleaded guilty to a charge of second degree burglary on advice of Public Defender Gerald Kenny.

Lukan was captured a short time ago by the clever work of two San Francisco police officers, Detective George Page and Sergeant Frank Jackson. Chief of Police Doyle, of Daly City, upon learning of his capture, immediately got in touch with the San Francisco police department and had Lukan brought to Daly City, where he pointed out several homes he had entered and burglarized.

After being notified by Chief Doyle, several residents of Daly City called at the property clerk's office at the Hall of Justice in San Francisco and identified some of their stolen property. And now that the notorious "match burglar" has been placed in Folsom prison, a number of these property owners will give thanks to the officers who succeeded in effecting his capture.

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE ARE UNITED IN MARRIAGE

Miss Annetta Peterson, of 185 Santa Barbara avenue, became the bride of Mr. Irving Heitmann at a beautiful wedding ceremony held last Saturday evening, July 20, at the Swedish Lutheran church in San Francisco. Rev. Philip Andreen officiated at the ceremony in the presence of a large assembly of relatives and friends.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a gown of egg-shell satin made with a tight fitting bodice, full skirt and satin train. She wore a veil of tulle which fell gracefully from a close-fitting cap of lace, adorned with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of orchids, gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Edna Johnson, of San Jose, was maid of honor. She wore a pale green chiffon frock and carried a shower bouquet of yellow roses.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Annette Dahlgren, Ida Soderblom and Agnes Smith. Each wore a frock made of a different shade of apricot chiffon. They carried shower bouquets of roses and snapdragons.

Little Miss Joyce Norwall, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Norwall, was flower girl.

Dr. Harold Heitmann, brother of the groom, was best man, and Messrs. Arnold Bache, Walter Janssen and Oscar Soderblom acted as ushers.

A reception was held in the French room of the Palace Hotel following the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gustaf Peterson of this city. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Heitmann, of San Francisco.

After returning from their honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Heitmann will reside in San Francisco.

ENJOY CAMPING TOUR OF NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Edward Lorentzen, of 674 Templeton avenue, Daly City, and John S. Alden, formerly of Daly City and now living in San Francisco, are making a camping tour of Northern California, and stopped at the Albertz ranch at Cloverdale for a brief visit Monday. While there they had the pleasure of meeting Colonel Arthur "Tex" Frolich, a house guest of Mrs. Albertz. Colonel Frolich is at present engaged in the preparation of text for the Fairchild School of Aviation. Colonel Frolich, who is one of the original members of the famous trio of aviators known as the Three Musketeers, is contemplating a Washington to Tokio flight before long, according to information he gave Mr. Lorentzen and Mr. Alden.

Mr. Lorentzen and Mr. Alden enjoyed their stay very much and are contemplating another visit in the near future.

Word that the boys had been seen in Magill, Nev., and were on their way to Salt Lake City, was received last Tuesday. They were believed to have been on their way to Boulder, Colo., where relatives are living.

THE EAGLES NEST

On Monday evening, August 4, the good will delegates will visit Half Moon Bay Aerie. Everyone is invited and we hope to see some Daly City merchants answer present. Last Friday the delegation called on Redwood City, and South San Francisco and San Mateo delegations were there also. A very enjoyable get-together it proved to be. The same delegations will meet at Half Moon Bay next Monday.

Who is the tallest Eagle in Colma-Vista Grande Aerie? Who is the shortest? Fatest? Thinnest?

Some one page Brother Bodien; and while we are paging, let's include the first ten presidents of the Daly City Aerie, for we want them all at the next meeting.

Why not sign up that next door neighbor of yours for the initiation on August 15? It will give the wife a good excuse for you to get out at least once a week. Remember, 500 by Christmas—not excuses.

Any member out of employment can obtain same by applying to Officer Heim.

All the members sympathize with Mrs. B. G. Kost in having her arm broken in two places, at the picnic last Sunday. We hope for a speedy recovery and no ill effects.

Fred Collins received the monthly attendance award at the last meeting.

COURT RULING CLOSES

BAY BRIDGE PROTEST

Final legal approval of formation of the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District was granted by the State Supreme Court last Wednesday.

In a long-awaited decision the court upheld Superior Judge C. J. Luttrell in overruling the protests of taxpayers in San Francisco, Napa, Sonoma and Mendocino counties against their arbitrary inclusion in the district.

The court declined to rule on the question of the legal power of the directors of the district to levy taxes. Such a suit should be brought separately after a tax levy has actually been attempted, the decision indicated.

Nether did the decision rule on City Attorney John J. O'Toole's request for determination of the legality of appointment of the San Francisco directors of the district.

San Francisco supervisors are expected to proceed with the appointment of another director to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Supervisor Frank R. Hays.

Four identical suits had been filed by protesting taxpayers in the four counties attacking legality of the district. Judge Luttrell decided against the protestants and they carried an appeal for a writ of review to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court ruling was confined to a decision that both the organization proceedings and Judge Luttrell's findings had been legal.

Away From Home

Soothing Southern Scenes; The Tassajara Hot Springs

One by one the so-called vacation days passed away. More than half of them with their precious possibilities had become company for those, too numerous, already of the past.

Call and demand were so insistent it seemed that the hour would never come when their claims might be evaded. Yet, it is a fact fully established by observation and reading the writings of philosophers from the most ancient down to "Thornton Wilder" that every mortal, born with gifts, strives for prominence among his fellows, labors to win publicity, and longs for followers. A fig for such triumphs when they come. They take too much for what they give. They forbid all the golden opportunities of youth, saying continuously, "Deny yourself and all our favors will be yours."

On the seventeenth the spell was broken. Daily duties were laid upon other shoulders. The writer permitted himself ten days of liberty to roam, read, dream, at will. The 8 o'clock Pickwick parlor-car picked him up at the top of the hill. There were only a few passengers aboard, so it was easy for the white-coated attendant to make him comfortable.

As he was conveyed along the state highway alive with automobiles of every make, all going in his direction were left behind, so rapidly does the Pickwick speed onward. Still he had time to inspect his means of travel. The soft seat upon which he reclined, the windows, easily adjusted, through which he viewed the ever changing scenic panorama, and the wires to catch the sounds of the air for the radio, indicated what forethought had been employed to afford comfort to the patrons. If hunger or thirst disturbed, the attendant had at his disposal wherever to allay either. If night came on with its drowsy weariness, the seats could be changed to berths.

As this modern carrier of the gasoline age took him swiftly through city after city and the stretches of country not too definitely separating one from the other, he thought what a marvelous period of mechanical advancement the space of his life has been.

Like the Spaniard, his father had ridden his saddle horse over the same thoroughfare, and in his own early manhood he had driven a horse and buggy along the same way, but now no horse is to be seen. As plain as the change from horse to gasoline is evident to all, who think, so is the difference in the roads, the buildings and the people. The new condition encompasses everything artificial.

In the air above, occasionally, an airplane, the pioneer of another advancement, attracted attention, causing the thoughtful to wonder if the aerial way was to supersede the present highly developed surface means. Bearing in mind what his life has witnessed, he was rather inclined to feel that the next generation will fly from place to place, in perfect safety.

Almost before he had finished his contemplation of what was within his reach for pleasure, he has arrived in San Francisco, one of the most progressive communities of the state. It was in gala dress, yellow bunting so lavishly displayed it seemed to be everything. The word on every tongue was "Rodeo." From near and far the multitudes had come. The sidewalks of the main street were crowded with spectators, among whom the representatives of the horse age, typically costumed, claimed complimentary attention. The cow-boys and cow-girls were full of the holiday spirit. It was their first day of the big week. A celebrity greatly honored, for the occasion, was Peter B. Kyne, the famous story writer, who had fought and defeated the amendment to forbid Rodeo celebrations. The honor paid to Peter B. created a fellow feeling, he being a great son of Moss Beach, San Mateo county.

Having called upon one of the faithful friends of youthful days, now residing at Salinas, and being seated in the Tassajara auto, there was nothing to disturb while the Rodeo parade went by, presenting a long procession of gayly caparisoned, stately horses, upon which sat daring men and women, ready for the show to take place that afternoon. The parade was lengthened by numerous local people on favorite horses, their display of silver mounted saddles and bridles, gorgeous colors, and faultless horsemanship contributing manifestly to the scene. Two big brass bands supplied martial music and many of the well-trained horses appeared to keep step. Altogether it was another tribute to the age that has joined the caravans of the past. It excited both enthusiasm and reminiscent sadness.

When the last of the street show had gone by, the Tassajara U. S. mail auto began the trip to the famous hot springs in the midst of the western San Lucia mountains, forty-seven miles away. The first ten miles is over the road to Monterey, now being remade, straighter, wider, and more evenly graded, thanks again to the funds arising from the gasoline tax. It will be inviting in the future, but at present the motorist finds his way with no exultation.

Then, the auto turns from the highway, taking a road turnpiking toward the south, permitting views of a barren, uninteresting country. Here and there is a deserted, miserable homestead, mute evidence of the enterprise of some settler who vainly struggled with scant natural opportunities to establish a home and be successful. How many wasted lives in just such places when real possibilities called to them but they did not know! If the young and industrious would but locate where his labor may be productive, he could not fail. Surely success is the result of a fortunate location.

Soon the crest was reached and you look down upon Carmel Valley, in which there are many fertile, pretty spots. Having descended the grade the auto goes up the valley, passing homes weaving the air of contentment. Fields of barley and oats, binder bound, being stacked, proclaim, in their abundance, that the season had been favorable, although the dark little piles of hay indicate that the June rain was untimely, but the little damage done to hay was more than compensated in the benefit to grain and later crops.

Speeding along, the fields are left behind and a wooded wild place is traversed, until a temporary resting station is reached at Jamesburg, where the versatile postmaster holds forth. That he was absent from his post was a disappointment, for he always has something unusual to tell. He sees things in a humorous light. He had gone in for the big week and was alluded to as "baggage" by some one, near and dear to him. Jamesburg is on the edge of where the great forest fire raged a year ago, and there was interest to observe how much one year had repaired the damage wrought.

Resuming the climb, and as the much steeper grade was overcome, gradually, there was ample time in which to scrutinize pronounced repair. The trees not so badly burned had leafed again, new shrubs had sprouted from the roots of the old, and a mat of grass and ferns had

JEFFERSON STARS SWAMP OCEANICS

Hitting the ball at a terrific pace, while playing errorless baseball, the Jefferson All Stars defeated the Oceanics by a score of 19 to 2, at Fleishacker Park, last Sunday, in a six inning game.

The contest was an exciting affair for three and one-half innings only 8 hits having been made and the score being 3 to 2 when the All Stars came to bat. They scored eight runs in the fourth and crossed the plate for the same number in the fifth.

Lawrence Kennedy and Gene Keagle divided the pitching burden for the winners. Lawrence chucked the first three innings. During this time he whiffed four batters, and allowed two runs and four hits. Only nine men faced Gene, six of them being benched via the strike-out route. Neither of them wasted much energy. They pitched only sixty-eight balls to the opposing batsmen.

The All Stars collected a total of fourteen hits. Aiello and Lagomarsino led the attack with three hits each. They both garnered a triple, Lloyd's blow coming in the fourth frame with the bases loaded.

DALY CITY MERCHANTS' TEAM MEET DEFEAT

The Daly City Merchants were defeated last Sunday on Jefferson high school grounds by the Anderson & Barngorva team of San Jose. For seven innings it was a good ball game, marred only by some erratic work on the part of the umpires, but in the eighth inning the visitors put over six runs to clinch the game. This team from San Jose is by far the fastest team to visit Jefferson grounds in the last two seasons. They have five players who have had experience in Texas and Southern leagues. The all around work of the visiting team featured, the infield making some wonderful plays.

For Daly City, Duke Cruchoff's hitting featured—three doubles and being robbed of a fourth which came in the sixth inning and would have tied the score at that time. Retig, the Merchants' new infielder, played a wonderful game at third, in place of Jimmy Keane, who is laid up with a bad ankle.

LOS GATOS EDITOR FIGHTS LIBEL CHARGE

H. L. Baggerly, Los Gatos newspaper publisher, was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Chester W. Moore, at San Jose last Wednesday on a charge of criminal libel preferred by Police Judge Percy O'Connor of San Jose. The preliminary hearing was set for next Monday.

Both Baggerly and Judge O'Connor reiterated their intention of fighting the case to a finish.

The charge arises from criticism of Judge O'Connor published in Baggerly's paper in connection with the much-discussed Josephine Grant case. Miss Grant, San Francisco society girl, was freed in San Jose police court on charges of driving while intoxicated and possessing liquor and a $50 fine was suspended on an additional reckless driving charge.

TO PATROL COUNTY HIGHWAY AT NIGHT

A permanent night patrol of the highways and roads in San Mateo county, under state supervision, will be inaugurated in a few days. This announcement has been made by Captain James Logan of the state traffic bureau at Redwood City, who said that he had information that two or more men would be added to the present county force for the "dawn to dusk" patrol. Because the state traffic control division is now solely under state supervision, the state will provide this county with a high-powered automobile for this work, Logan stated. In the event that two new men are not added, two will be selected from the regular day force.

Following a series of fatal and serious accidents more than six months ago, the county board of supervisors started a joint night patrol between the bureau and the sheriff's office, but it ended unsatisfactory after a month's service.

Aged Man Found Dead

With no money and a dry crust of bread found in the pockets of the clothing, the well-dressed body of a man, partially identified as Robert J. Smith, about 60 years of age, was found lying under some trees on the railroad right-of-way between Oak Grove and Palm avenues, Burlingame. Death, which evidently occurred while the man slept, is believed to have been due to natural causes.

SOOTHING SOUTHERN SCENES:
THE TASSAJARA HOT SPRINGS

covered the bare spots. The general appearance was changed for the better. The stockmen rejoiced over better pastures. The cattle and the deer were fatter. The forest fire that had seemed ruinous did some good after all. Of any destruction no one can judge exactly what the ultimate result will be.

The powerful Pierce-Arrow rolled steadily forward, increasing its altitude, pausing only once to permit its boiling to subside so that the driver might pour into its mysterious ramifications a gallon of cold water. Exerting its power again the machine continued the ascent by devious windings, sometimes in the hot sunshine and occasionally in the shade of big trees, until the divide was attained. There a sign stated "Santa Barbara Forest Reservation: Altitude 5060 feet."

From this point a magnificent view of desolate, yet artistic, mountain scenery is presented, extending hundreds of miles, no matter which way one turns. Rocks and sparse vegetation suggest barrenness. Beautiful lines of ridges and peaks relieve the monotony.

So, free of tension, down the grade both auto and its occupants relax and rest, feeling that Tassajara is not far away.

Here and there, on the dry rocky mountain side, rises the strikingly beautiful mesal, like an enormous holy candle, invoking the pilgrim to pause and think of God. How such richness of bloom, displayed in delicate, lacey white, is produced from real aridness is unquestionably a miracle. One such triumphant flower after eight years of preparation and the plant dies.

Easily the down grade is followed. Interest in the mesal is passing away, when the driver calls attention to a picture of an Indian maiden, painted on the side of a boulder, by Harrison Fisher, the artist. It suggests serene, superior, womanly intuition, more than primitiveness.

Next, at the end of the trail, the comfortable hotel of sandstone construction, the numerous cottages and the commodious dining room of Tassajara loom into notice.

In a moment more the auto has stopped and the guests are welcomed by the genial host, I. J. Cornett, and his assistants assign them to home-like rooms.

The location is on the Tassajara Creek, where two canyons intersect. A flat space of a few acres afford opportunity for the formation of a little rich soil that in the course of hundreds of years produced a fine old oak, and, as if for comparison, a few feet away, a friendly sycamore grew to a great size. Those two trees are the sentinels and protectors of the place. A hundred yards from the trees, up the stream, are the most famous, real hot springs of this state. The Indians knew them and made use of their virtues long before the coming of the missionaries. The Indians named the spot "Tassajara," in their language, meaning a typical location for drying venison for future use as food. When they congregated for the annual venison drying, their sick and afflicted were cured by the magical hot water. From near and far they came. Their well known trails remain to this day.

The water and vapor at 140 degrees come forth in large and never ceasing quantity. They contain sulphur, magnesia, soda and other minerals, and have curative powers over a large number of infirmities when used copiously, both for drinking and bathing. A week's experience restores energetic vitality and a fortnight's continuance makes the benefit more permanent. The good effect is felt for months. People who have traveled the world over say there is none better anywhere.

Nature has provided the water and vapor. Through the ingenuity of man it has been made more efficient, by means of an enclosed, capacious plunge tank and a vapor and solar compartment, one of each for men and women. There are six kinds of water to drink.

Following the Tassajara system, one takes the plunge in the forenoon and the vapor and solar in the afternoon, and drinks the water at any time. All the baths are free and may be taken when fancy suggests. In addition the masseur is ready to give additional comfort when called upon. Cleanliness in every apartment is worthy of notice.

The intervening periods of time may be passed pleasantly, strolling in the clear hot sunshine along the creek, sitting under shady trees, playing like dolphins in the big swimming pool, hiking to Flag Rock, making friends of the two tame deer at liberty or watching the wild ones in the evening, fishing for trout, dancing, card playing, and trying your skill at pitching horseshoes.

Altogether, it is luxury of the best description, a kind that results in lasting benefit. Every human being needs it. Those accustomed to working hard require it more than others, and the sooner the better. The old adage "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" urges you to take your turn, in time.

Appreciation of Tassajara Hot Springs is shown by the trails the Indians trod, by the winding road over the steep mountains due to the white man's energy, and by the testimonials of thousands of guests, who parted with their pains and were grateful.

Under the present I. J. Cornett management so many prominent improvements for the benefit of the guest have been made that it is not possible to mention them. Suffice to say that the resort is in better condition now than ever before.

All the foregoing observations and ideas came to the mind of the writer while he spent a week in this wonder-spot of nature, accompanied, amused, and upheld by Louis Arbanas, the apple man of Watsonville, whom he met, for the first time, on the Tassajara auto stage. He wrote them to please his friends.

"THE DOOR BETWEEN"
AT THE GEARY THEATRE

San Francisco, always responding to good theatrical feasts, and worshipping at the shrine of any true artist of the stage, will doubtless hail with delight the news that Edna Hibbard is returning to play the role of Ethel Brooks in "The Door Between," an audacious comedy, booked to open at the Geary Theatre, Monday night, August 5th, with matinee Wednesday and Saturday. Miss Hibbard endeared herself to the hearts of theatre goers in her recent appearance in John Golden's production, "Let Us Be Gay."

It is said that in "The Door Between" she has not only a comedy role that shows her as a deft comedienne, but that she is also called upon to enact some highly dramatic scenes that prove her true histrionic ability. "The Door Between" is by Vincent Lawrence, brilliant young playwright of a dozen stage hits, including "In Love With Love," "Two Fellows and a Girl," "Two Married Men," "Sour Grapes," "The Distant Drum," and others of equal success.

Of particular interest is the news that Edna Hibbard has two leading men in "The Door Between," both of them stars in their own right. One is Kenneth Thomson, noted for his stage and screen portrayals, and Richard Tucker, former leading man for Marjorie Rameau, Pauline Frederick and many others. Mr. Tucker was recently seen and heard in the talking picture "The Jazz Singer," and "On Trial." It was his artistry that did much to help make these pictures a success.

Fay Bainter and John Halliday in "Jealousy" will end their engagement at the Geary Saturday, August 3.

SUPERIOR QUALITY PICTURES
AT THE DALY CITY THEATRE

"It must be a picture of superior quality" if it plays at the Daly City Theatre, where feature attractions are always carefully selected before given a playing date. For this week the Daly City Theatre will offer a glorious array of stellar attractions, both on stage and screen, starting with the big double bill for Saturday headed by Glen Tryon in a screamingly funny comedy special called "The Kid's Clever," and another feature of exceptional merit, Bob Steele in "Captain Careless." There will be candy for the kiddies at the matinee, together with the serial thriller "Vultures of the Sea," and silver for the ladies at the night performances.

Sunday brings the ever reliable laugh producer, Snooky White, and his merry comedians to the stage in a big fun act, and the screen will present "Code of the Air," a big thrilling air story with Kenneth Harlan, June Marlow and Arthur Rankin in the leading roles.

BOYS AND GIRLS

John Lawrence, 1-year-old baby of Tusculum, Ala., tried to make friends with a rattlesnake found in the yard of his home. The mother killed the reptile with a chair and the child was unharmed.

Jack Behr, 12-year-old Brooklyn boy is hailed by experts as a coming tennis star. He is a cousin of Karl Behr, former national doubles champion.

Davy "Sonny Boy" Lee was forced to cancel his theatrical engagement in Chicago and the theatre in which he appeared was fined $250 for violating the child labor law.

Richeliene Rainey, 4-year-old Nashville girl, has already won a wide reputation as an acrobatic dancer.

Brendon Finn, 12, of Somerville, Mass., won a trip to Washington and a gold watch as first prize in the national traffic essay contest.

Charles Albany, 12, won the championship in the seventh annual marble tournament at Ocean City N. J., defeating Micheal Barche of Akron, Q., in the finals.

Kieth Morgan, 15-year-old Boy Scout, rescued Mrs. Herbert Judd from drowning at Falmouth, Mass.

Frances Zuckigesick, an Indian girl of Franz, Canada, looking after animal traps while carrying a papoose on her back, was attacked by a bear with two cubs, and after a fierce struggle killed the mother bear with a small hand axe.

RECKLESS DRIVERS
TAKE HEAVY TOLL

In connection with the examinations for driver's licenses, which must be taken by more than 2,000,000 drivers in California, attention is called to the following statement issued by the California Committee on Public Safety:

"The recent action of the state in calling upon operators of motor vehicles to submit to examination as to fitness and to obtain new licenses is expected to eliminate many dangerous operators now on the highways. However, a study of the situation shows that it is not the inexperienced or unfit drivers who cause ALL the accidents. The careless and reckless EXPERIENCED drivers take a heavy toll of human life and property."

"According to statistics, automobiles are ten times as deadly as typhoid fever. They are nearly twice as deadly as diphtheria. But, this fatality rate is preventable if each citizen will do his duty."

While the California Committee on Public Safety is a co-ordination of nearly fifty state-wide bodies, and it is working through the radio, newspapers, magazines, pictures, and civic organizations, the responsibility for safe driving in the final analysis is up to the individual.

"If every citizen will give a little thought and time to the big subject of safety in traffic, the effect will be far-reaching indeed, and the 2,000 dead, 50,000 injured and $60,000,000 property loss faced by the people of California this year will be materially reduced."

"COLLEGE LOVE," TALKING
PICTURE, AT THE EMBASSY

Nothing appeals more to the present day picture theatre audience than a true story, or at least a book that reflects the idealistic spirit of college life. "College Love," the talking, singing, action picture at the Embassy Theatre, San Francisco, is this kind of film. It has all of the popular collegiate players in the cast, and these young performers seem inspired in the realization that they have their first all talking feature length vehicle. The picture is almost entirely college romance, and there is plenty of heart interest and suspense. George Lewis, Eddie Phillips, Dorothy Gulliver, Hayden Stevenson and Churchill Ross are the principal members of the cast. A list of novelties, musical and comedy sound pictures form the supporting program for this entertaining feature of college life.

A man may transfer his affections from his wife to her mother, but he can't transfer alimony, as George Smith, a Michigan farmer, has discovered. After Smith was ordered to pay $7 a week to his divorced wife, he married his mother-in-law and stopped his alimony payments on the ground that he couldn't afford to support both. The judge disagreed and warned Smith to come across promptly.

One individual who is not likely to go in for the reducing fad is Aga Khan, an Indian prince and head of the Ismaili sect of Mohammedans, now living in Paris. Each year elders of the sect visit the prince, weigh him, and pay him his weight in gold. He weighs about 200 pounds.

LEGION TO FIGHT FOR HOSPITALS

Summoning the members of the California delegation in Congress to aid in the fight of the American Legion for the construction of the $1,500,000 new veterans' hospital in San Francisco, State Commander F. N. Belgrano, Jr., of the World War veterans' organization, is planning a campaign throughout the state to enlist support behind the Legion's national drive for additional hospital construction in various states of the nation.

As a part of the American Legion's program, the construction of a new San Francisco veterans' bureau hospital would provide the means of transferring the diagnostic center from the U. S. veterans hospital at Palo Alto to San Francisco and thus provide better facilities for the work to be done, according to Commander Belgrano.

Failure of the federal Congress to pass the hospital construction program presented by the American Legion at the last regular session of Congress has created a situation which has become grave, Belgrano points out.

"One of the more serious aspects of the situation confronting us is that due to the failure to pass the bill authorizing additional hospital construction to take proper care of the mentally ill World War veterans," Commander Belgrano says. "With government hospitals unable to take care of the load of mentally ill veterans of the World War because of a lack of beds, and with hospitals in most of the states over-crowded, many pitiful instances of the serious situation confronting these men are found in recent reports to the American Legion."

Commander Belgrano will ask Senators Hiram W. Johnson and Samuel M. Shortridge, together with the members of the California delegation in the House of Representatives, to lend their support to the drive for the passage of the American Legion's hospitalization program at the regular session in December.

SCHOOL EXHIBITS
AT THE STATE FAIR

More than 2,000 schools of California will be represented in the educational department of the Diamond Jubilee State Fair and Western Exposition in Sacramento, August 31 to September 9.

In making this announcement, Ellis Franklin, director in charge of the department, declared this will be the greatest educational display not only in the history of California but probably in the history of America.

The exhibits will range from basket weaving by Indian schools to fully equipped airplanes built by polytechnic high school students. So large is the number of entries that a huge tent will be erected to accommodate the overflow from the permanent educational building.

Twenty-three county school systems will be represented: Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Del Norte, Fresno, Inyo, Kern, Kings, Humboldt, Mariposa, Modoc, Marin, Nevada, Napa, Placer, Sonoma, Santa Cruz, San Diego, San Benito, Sacramento, Solano, Yolo and Yuba.

STORY FROM THE START

Athol Meldrum, young Scotsman, starts out to seek his fortune. He arrives at San Francisco practically broke and meets a fellow adventurer whom he dubs the Prodigal. With Jim Hubbard they join the gold rush to Alaska. On the boat Athol meets Berna, a young woman traveling with her grandfather and a hard-looking couple named Winkenstein who figure as her aunt and uncle. Landing at Skagway, Athol's party at once takes the trail. In a snowslide on the Chilcot trail, which Berna and her companions had taken, hundreds of lives are lost. Fearful for Berna's safety, Athol hastens to the scene. He finds the old man dead. At Bennett, Berna comes to Athol, confesses her love, and begs him to marry her, to save her from the harsh fate she foresees. He is unwilling to take such a decisive step, and tells her they must wait. Some days afterward Berna tells Athol that Winkenstein plans to sell her to "Black Jack" Locasto, millionaire miner of evil reputation. Reaching the gold fields, Athol and his party find the claims all taken. Unable to locate Berna, Athol seeks information from Locasto. "Black Jack" disclaims knowledge of her whereabouts, and lures Meldrum to a lonely spot and beats him into unconsciousness. Through a lucky chance Athol finds Berna. They set a date for their marriage, the first of June.

CHAPTER VIII

"You'd better quit," said the Prodigal. It was the evening of my mishap, and he had arrived unexpectedly from town. "It just fits in with my plans. I'm getting Jim to come in, too. I've realized on that stuff I bought, made over three thousand clear profit, and with it I've made a dicker for a property on the beach above Bonanza. Gold hill they call it. I've a notion it's all right. Anyway, we'll tunnel in and see. You and Jim will have a quarter share each for your work, while I'll have an extra quarter for the capital I've put in. Is it a go?" I said it was.

Next day found us all three surveying our claim. The first thing to do was to build a cabin. Right away we began to level off the ground. The work was pleasant, and conducted in such friendship that the time passed most happily. Indeed, my only worry was about Berna. I schooled myself into the belief that she was all right, but, thank God, every moment was bringing her nearer to me.

We had hauled the logs for the cabin, and the foundation was laid. Every day saw our future home nearer completion.

One evening I spied the saturnine Ribwood climbing down the hill to our tent. He hailed me:

"Say, we want a night watchman up at the claim to go on four hours a night at a dollar an hour. You see, there's been a lot of sluice-box robberies lately, and we're scared for our clean-up. There's four hours every night the place is deserted and Hoofman proposed we should get you to keep watch."

"Yes," I said; "I'll run up every evening if the others don't object."

They did not; so the next night, and for about a dozen after that, I spent the darkest hours watching on the claim where previously I had worked.

It was the dimmest and most uncertain hour of the four, and I was sitting at my post of guard. As the night was chilly I had brought along an old gray blanket, similar in color to the mound of the pay-dirt. There had been quite a cavity dug in the dump during the day, and into this I crawled and wrapped myself in my blanket. From my position I could see the string of boxes containing the rifles. By my side lay a loaded shotgun.

"If the swine comes," Ribwood had said, "let him have a clean-up of lead instead of gold."

Lying there, I got to thinking of the robberies. They were remarkable. All had been done by an expert. Each time the robber had cleaned up from two to three thousand dollars, and all within the past month. There was some mysterious masterstroke in our midst, one who operated swiftly and surely, and left absolutely no clue of his identity.

I was quiet for a while, watching, dreamily the dark shadows of the dusk.

Hist! What was that? Surely the bushes were moving over there by the hillside. I strained my eyes. I was right: they were.

I watched and waited. A man was parting the bushes. Cautionously crawling like a snake, he worked his way to the sluice-boxes. None but a keen watcher could have seen him. Again and again he paused, peered around, listened intently. Very carefully, with my eyes fixed on him, I lifted the gun to my shoulder. I had him covered.

I waited. Somehow I was loath to shoot. My nerves were a-quiver. Proof, more proof, I said. I saw him working busily, lying flat alongside the boxes. How crafty, how skillful he was! He was disconnecting the boxes. He would let the water run to the ground; then, there in the exposed riffles, would be his harvest. Would I shoot . . . now . . . now . . .

Then, in the midnight hush, my gun blazed forth. With one scream the man tumbled down, carrying along with him the disconnected box. The water rushed over the ground in a deluge. I must capture him. There he lay in that pouring stream. . . . Now I had him.

In that torrent of icy water I grappled with my man. Over and over we rolled. He tried to gouge me. He was small, but oh, how strong! He held down his face. Fiercely I wrenched it up to the light. Heavens! It was the Worm.

I gave a cry of surprise, and my clutch on him must have weakened, for at that moment he gave a violent wrench, a cat-like twist, and tore him self free. Men were running in from all directions.

"Catch him!" I cried. "Yonder he goes."

But the little man was shooting forward like a deer. Right and left ran his pursuers, mistaking each other for the robber in the semi-gloom, yelling frantically, mad with the excitement of a man-hunt. And in the midst of it all I lay in a pool of mud and water, with a sprained wrist and a bite on my leg.

"Why didn't you hold him?" shouted Ribwood.

"I couldn't," I answered. "I saved your cleanup, and he got some of the lead. Besides, I know who he is: Pat Doogan."

"You don't say. Well, I'm darned. We'll get him. I'll go into town first thing in the morning and get out a warrant for him."

He went, but the next evening back he returned, looking very surly and disgruntled.

"Well, what about the warrant?" said Hoofman.

"Didn't get it," snapped Ribwood. "Look here, Hoofman, I met Locasto. Black Jack says Pat was caged away, dead to all the world, in the backroom of the Omega saloon all night. There's two loafers and the barkeeper to back him up. What can we do in the face of that? Say, young fellow, I guess you mistook your man."

"I guess I did not," I protested stoutly.

They both looked at me for a moment and shrugged their shoulders.

Time went on and the cabin was quietly nearing completion. The roof of poles was in place. It only remained to cover it with moss and thawed-out earth to make it our future home.

More and more my dream hours were jealously consecrated to Berna. How ineffably sweet were they. How full of delicious imaginings! How pregnant of high hope! O, I was born to love, I think, and I never loved but one. This story of my life is the story of Berna. It is a thing of words and words and words, yet every word is Berna. Berna. Feel the heartache behind it all. Read between the lines, Berna. Berna.

The Prodigal was always "snooping" around and gleaming information from most mysterious sources. One evening he came to us.

"Boys, get ready, quick. There's a rumor of a stampede for a new creek. Ophir creek they call it, away on the other side of the divide somewhere. A prospector went down ten feet and got fifty-cent dirt. We've got to get in on this. There's a mob coming from Dawson, but we'll get there before the rush."

Quickly we got together blankets and a little grub, and, keeping out of sight, we crawled up the hill under cover of the brush. Soon we came to a place from which we could command a full view of the valley. Here we lay down, awaiting developments.

On the far slope of Eldorado, I saw a hawk soar upward. Surely a man was moving amid the brush, two men a dozen men, moving in single file very stealthily. I pointed them out.

"It's the stampede," whispered Jim. "We've got to get on to the trail of that crowd. Travel like blazes. We can cut them off at the head of the valley."

"Throw away your blankets, boys," said the Prodigal. "Just keep a little grub. We must connect with that bunch if we break our necks."

It was hours after when we overtook them, about a dozen men all in the maddest hurry, and casting behind them glances of furtive apprehension.

The leader was going like one possessed. We blundered on behind him, the same mad, heart-breaking hurry mile after mile, hour after hour, content to follow the man of iron who was guiding us to the virgin treasures.

on, parched and weary, faint and foot-sore. But still our leader kept on.

Suddenly the Prodigal said to me: "Say, you boys will have to go on without me. I'm all in."

He dropped in a limp heap on the ground and instantly fell asleep. Several of the others had dropped out, too. They fell asleep where they gave up, utterly exhausted. We had now been going sixteen hours, and still our leader kept on.

It was about four in the afternoon when we reached the creek. Up to our leader plunged, till he came to a place where a rude shaft had been dug. We gathered around him.

"Here it is, boys," he said. "Here's my discovery stake. Now you fellows go up or down, anywhere you've a notion to, and put in your stakes. Maybe you'll stake a million-dollar claim, maybe a blank. Mining's all a gamble. But go ahead, boys. I wish you luck."

We Had Now Been Going Sixteen Hours, and Still Our Leader Kept On.

So we strung out, and, coming in rotation, Jim and I staked seven and eight below discovery.

Then I threw myself down on a bit of moss, and, covering my head with my coat to ward off the mosquitoes; in a few minutes I was dead to the world.

I was awakened by the Prodigal. "Rouse up," he was saying; "you've slept right round the clock. We've got to get back to town and record those claims. Jim's gone three hours ago."

I was sleep-stupid, sore, stiff in every joint. Racking pains made me groan at every movement, and the chill night air had brought on twinges of rheumatism, but we started off.

It was about nine in the morning when we got to the gold office. There was quite a number ahead of me, and I knew I was in for a long wait. I will never forget it. For three days with the exception of two brief sleep-spells, I had been in a fierce helter-skelter of excitement, and I had eaten no very satisfying food. As I stood in that sullen crowd I swayed with weariness, and my legs were doubling un-

Knockout Ended Duel Between Rival Hares

An English naturalist describes a duel which he witnessed in the moonlight between two hares, the cause of their dissension being a third, which was a female that went on nibbling grass during the encounter without paying the least attention to the contest. The battlers were facing each other in a real fighting attitude, their forepaws held in front looking like human fists. Standing on their haunches these two fighters went all out. They boxed in fine style, their little "fists" darting in and out like flashes. Some blows were cleverly parried, others went well home, and as they fought footwork was not absent, for they circled round, but always faced each other. One lost his balance and sprang lightly aside, to be instantly

Nicest Auto Ride

Dessa had the toothache. She had been troubled in the same way only a few times before in her thirteen years. This time she came home from school crying and her mother promptly took her to see the dentist. He said the tooth had been neglected too long and must come out, advising that she take gas. Telling Dessa to "be a fine brave girl" mother stepped out into the waiting room, while the dentist and anesthetist went into action. In what seemed but a few seconds, the door opened and the dentist announced smilingly "All over." Dessa sat up, blinking, as mother took her hand and asked, "Did it hurt much, honey?" "Well," said Dessa, "it kept right on aching until the epidemic took effect, and then I had the nicest automobile ride."

der me. I staggered forward and straightened up suddenly. I was near the wicket. Only two were ahead of me. A clerk was recording their claims. One had thirty-four above, the other fifty-two below. The clerk looked flustered, fatigued.

It was my turn. "I want to record eight below on Ophir," I said.

"What name?" he asked.

I gave it. He turned up his book.

"Eight below, you say. Why, that's already recorded."

"Can't be," I retorted. "I just got down from there yesterday after planting my stakes."

"Can't help it. It's recorded by some one else, recorded early yesterday."

"Look here," I exclaimed; "what kind of a game are you putting up on me? I tell you I was the first on the ground. I alone staked the claim."

"That's strange," he said. "There must be some mistake. Anyway, you'll have to move on and let the others get up to the wicket. You're blocking the way. All I can do is to look into the matter for you, and I've got no time now. Come back tomorrow. Next, please."

The next man pushed me aside, and there I stood, gaping and gasping. A man in the waiting line looked at me pityingly.

"It's no use, young fellow; you'd better make up your mind to lose that claim. They'll flim-flam you out of it somehow. They've sent some one out now to stake over you. If you kick, they'll say you didn't stake proper. Them government officials is the crookedest bunch that ever made fuel for hell-fire."

I was stunned with disappointment.

"What you want," he continued, "is to get a pull with some of the officials. Get a stand-in, young fellow."

"Well," I said, "I'm not going to be cheated out of my claim. If I've got to move heaven and earth—"

"You'll do nothing of the kind. If you get sassy there's the police to put the lid on you. You can talk till you're purple round the gills. It won't cut no figure. They've got us all cinched. We've just got to take our medicine. It's no use gold round belyaching. You'd better go away and sit down."

And I did.

I had to see Berna at once. Already I had paid a visit to the Paragon restaurant, that new and glittering place of resort run by the Winkensteins, but she was not on duty.

In the evening I returned. I took a seat in one of the curtained boxes. The place was brilliant, lit up, many-mirrored and flashily ornate in gilt and white. In the box before me a white-haired lawyer was entertaining a lady of easy virtue; in the box behind, a larkin quartette from the Pavilion theater was holding high revelry. There was no mistaking the character of the place. In the heart of the city's tenderloin it was a haunt of human riff-raff, a palace of gilt and guilt.

And it was in this place Berna worked. She waited on these wantons; she served those swine. She heard their loose talk, their careless oaths. She knew everything. Oh, it was pitiful; it sickened me to the soul. I sat down and buried my face in my hands.

"Order, please."

I knew that sweet voice. It thrilled me, and I looked up suddenly. There was Berna standing before me.

She gave a quick start, then recovered herself. A look of delight came into her eyes, eager, vivid delight.

"Oh, I am so glad to see you again," Berna, I said, "what are you doing with that paint on your face?"

"Oh, I'm sorry." She was rubbing distressfully at a dab of rouge on her cheek. "I knew you would be cross, but I had to; they made me. It's just a little pink—all the women do it. It makes me look happier, and it doesn't hurt me any."

followed up, and the punching was renewed. Apart from the soft noise of the blows going home there was no sound. The end came quickly. It was almost a knockout, but I am afraid our rules would have put it down as a foul. One hare slipped down, landed on all four feet, and quick as lightning his opponent turned and gave him a kick that landed him many yards away.

Virgin Gold

In an unknown cave on the Auckland Islands lie the remains of a ship which contained more than $10,000,000 worth of virgin gold and nuggets. Some seventy years ago she sailed from Melbourne, loaded with miners returning with their gold from Ballarat.

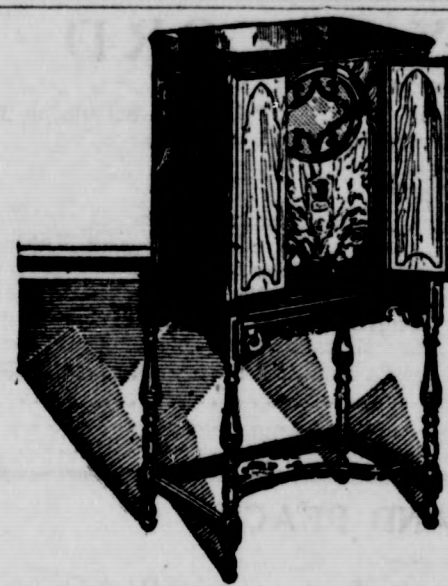

Beached among the islands, a current drifted her into a great cave. Her masts, striking the roof, were driven through the hull and she sank. A few survivors reached the coast of New Zealand, but no search has yet discovered the cave in which lies the bulk of this valuable treasure ship.

Tiniest Church Found

England's tiniest church has been found at Culbone. It is only 30 feet long and 12 feet wide. There is no pulpit because of insufficient space. In the church parish are only 30 people and the village has only two houses, so that at times the congregation is almost nil.

Blessing Bestowed on

Product of Vineyards

In nearly all the vineyards of France the annual celebrations have just taken place, in the course of which the year's vintage receives priestly benediction.

One of the most curious of these festivities is that held at Boulbon, a village near Tarascon in Provence. All the inhabitants of the countryside around Tarascon, on the day of the celebration, march first upon Boulbon, and then from the village to a chapel on a neighboring hilltop.

Every processioner carries in the crook of his arm an unopened bottle of local wine, which, when the chapel is reached, is blessed by the priest, who sprinkles holy water upon it. Whereupon every one draws his cork and drinks; and then, carefully guarding the bottle, which he keeps until the following year, he returns to Boulbon with song and dance.

BUSINESS AND PEACE

Of far more significance, perhaps, than all the efforts of diplomats and other official agencies for peace is the world-wide character which is being assumed by many basic industrial enterprises.

For example, both Ford and General Motors are making business alliances with automobile interests in Germany and other countries. American investments abroad are being made in ever increasing magnitude. Oil and nitrate interests of many countries are pooling their resources. The same is true of other industrial activities. In some respects it appears that business is becoming internationalized, through the formation of great cartels and trusts.

But, however we may look upon these immense combinations of capital from the standpoint of the consumer, it can hardly be denied that they present one of the most hopeful indications that world peace may yet become a reality.

After all, most wars are economic wars. Those who hold the purse-strings can generally dictate whether the world shall have war or peace. With capital of various nations invested in common, it becomes imperative that business men use every resource at their command to preserve peace as a matter of self protection.

And when capital can not afford to see the world involved in war, we may be reasonably assured that there will be no war.

New York plays have had a bad season. Due, perhaps, to the playwrights' inability to invent anything new in the way of profanity.

THE COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER

As and advertising force, the weekly newspaper is regarded by many prominent manufacturers as the leading medium in America. Although there are still many who have not discovered its possibilities, it does hold a unique position among periodicals. A writer has listed a number of advantages of the community paper. His points follow: "At one sitting the average reader scans all the pages of the local paper. No other publication has all its pages read as carefully by so large a percentage of its readers.

"There is no other publication that reaches so many families in a given trade territory as does the local newspaper. No other is read by as many people for each subscriber. The whole family reads it.

"An advertisement in the local paper backs up the sales effort of the local retailer far more effectively than any other medium."

For these reasons the community weekly newspaper is able to serve, not only the advertiser, but every worthy cause for the betterment of the entire community.

A MESSAGE TO GARCIA

One of the most dramatic exploits of the Spanish-American war was recalled recently when a forest fire in Mill Valley, Marin county, destroyed, along with many others, the summer home of Colonel Andrew S. Rowan, U. S. Army, retired.

In 1898, shortly before the declaration of war on Spain, President McKinley desired to communicate with General Garcia of the Cuban forces, who was with his revolutionary army somewhere in the wilds of Cuba—just where, no one knew. Lieutenant Rowan was chosen for the hazardous and seemingly impossible task of finding Garcia, and set out alone on his mission.

Going first to Jamaica, he crossed to Cuba in an open boat, and after nine days search, aided by Cuban patriots, he found General Garcia, delivered his message, and returned to Washington with the information desired by the President, after several narrow escapes from capture and death.

His exploit was immortalized in Elbert Hubbard's editorial, "A Message to Garcia," of which more than forty million copies have been printed in many languages. Rowan in 1923 wrote his own story of "How I Carried the Message to Garcia."

Hubbard's editorial and Rowan's story are both inspiring pieces of writing which no one should fail to read.

OUR CHANGING WORLD

Our present era is distinguished from all others by the rapid changes which are taking place in practically everything which pertains to our daily life. New inventions, new industries, new amusements, and new habits generally are playing their parts in the ever-changing scene.

Luxuries of yesterday have become the necessities of today. Products only recently deemed indispensable have almost disappeared, while others unknown a few years ago are now used everywhere.

The rise of the automobile, motion picture and electrical industries has been astounding, as has been the advance of aviation and the newest amusement, the talkies. Yet, while Americans indulge in more luxury than ever before, savings deposits have trebled in a dozen years, and the number of depositors has been quadrupled.

Whether the sweeping changes we are witnessing are for better or worse is widely debated. But it can hardly be denied that the average person has more of the things which make for comfort and enjoyment than ever before.

MODERN RURAL SCHOOLS

Elimination of small rural schools which have outlived their day and the development of larger schools that may be made real centers of community life are recommended by Dr. William J. Cooper, United States Commissioner of Education.

The old one-room school house served well in the period when sparse settlements and lack of good roads prevented the assembling of more than a few pupils in any one place for instruction. If it did not serve well, it was at least the best means available for its purpose.

Much progress has already been made in the direction of consolidated schools, but the movement has not kept pace with the need for better planned instruction. Dr. Cooper believes that all small rural schools might well be eliminated in districts where good roads make transportation of pupils for longer distances practicable.

Where this is not feasible for all pupils, he suggests that those of the sixth grade and above should be transported to the larger schools, which should be made community centers. In no other way will it be possible to give farm children an education comparable with that enjoyed by those of the towns and cities—and all children should have equal opportunities so far as it is possible to provide them. The matter of rural education is one of the most pressing of the problems which confront our educational system. It deserves the most earnest consideration at the hands of educators and the general public alike.

Slow moving films may have been suggested by watching some fellow rise to give his street car seat to a homely woman.

For patience Job has a rival in Luca Boz, an aged Italian who waited twenty-eight years for a chance to shoot his brother.

FAKE CLUB BILL SIGNED BY GOVERNOR YOUNG

The death knell of those California automobile clubs which have justified the appellation of "fly-by-night" through being "long on promise and short on performance" has been sounded through Governor Young signing a legislative measure which places them under the supervision of the State Insurance Commission.

All such associations now must post bonds of $100,000 to guarantee performance of their contracts. Automobile owners are relieved of liability for injuries incurred by non-paying guests in their cars in another bill signed by Governor Young.

The Daly City Camp Fire Girls held their regular weekly meeting Thursday evening of last week in Company No. 5 fire house on Bellevue avenue. The girls have chosen Otyokwa for the name of their group, which means a group of girls all working toward the same aim. Miss Mae Irons, of Acton street, a former Camp Fire Girl of Denver, Colorado, and Miss Elsie Bodeker, of Goethe street, were the guests of the evening. An impromptu program was given, each member doing her bit. Sixteen members were present. Miss Florence Thorsen, assistant guardian, took charge of the meeting. The girls are planning a whist party to be given in the near future. At the close of the meeting dainty refreshments were served.

PREPARE FOR WINTER

There are so many delicious fruits that make most alluring preserves, preserves and relishes, that it is necessary, if we have a supply for the fruit closet, to be ready for each fruit as it comes. Look up the old reliable and well-liked recipes and nothing will be missed.

Each year we like to try some recommended concoction, so a card index helps to keep them where we can find them quickly.

Andover Conserve.—Put in a large preserve kettle eight pounds of hard pears, two lemons, one orange and one-fourth pound of preserved ginger, all put through the meat grinder. Add eight pounds of sugar, set over moderate heat until the sugar is melted and the juices flow, then cook, stirring occasionally until thick and clear. Now, with the addition of pectin from the bottle, the long cooking is eliminated and the amount of fruit to can greatly increased.

Fruit Conserve.—Take three pounds each of pears, plums, and apples. Stone the plums and boil the stones in two cupsful of water forty minutes. Peel core and chop the fruit; add one lemon and one orange (both chopped), six pounds of sugar and the strained juice from the stones. Cook, stirring until thick. Here, too, the pectin may be added and save long cooking.

Harlequin Pickle.—Take ten large green and ten red peppers and twelve onions. Chop the peppers coarsely, pour boiling water over them and let stand ten minutes; drain, cover again with boiling water and drain after standing five minutes. Drain and add the onions chopped, two cupsful of brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of salt and one quart of vinegar. Bring to a boil and cook fifteen minutes, then can in jars.

Meriton Pickle.—Slice five dozen unpeeled green cucumbers about four inches long. Sprinkle with salt in layers and let stand over night. Drain off the brine, add one and one-half dozen small onions sliced thinly. To five cupsful of vinegar add one large cupful of the best olive oil, three teaspoonfuls of celery salt, one-half teaspoonful of white mustard seed and beat vigorously; pour over the cucumbers and onions and put into jars and seal. Keep in a cool place.

Thirst Quenchers.

How to make lemonade is something on which most people think they need no instruction. However, if one will use a sugar sirup to sweeten the drink it will seem richer and most tasty. If one hasn't the sirup ready, dissolve the sugar in water before adding to the lemonade. Try this and see if it doesn't make an improvement over the ordinary way. Take the juice of half a dozen lemons, a cupful of sugar and six cupsful of water. Put the sugar and water together and when the sugar is well dissolved add the lemon juice. Serve at once well chilled.

Give the young children fruit drinks during vacation time when they are hot and tired from their play. The fruit used in the drink furnishes much that is beneficial in lime, and other minerals and salts. The drink takes the place of the water lost by perspiration. The sugar used as sweetening gives zest to the fruits and it, of itself, is a highly concentrated form of human energy. It helps provide vim, vigor and vitality to make rosy, bright-eyed children the happy little beings they are.

The bottled drinks of pop and such kinds are not wholesome for children, and should be given them very sparingly or not at all. Iced drinks of any kind should not be served, but the drink may be cool and just as refreshing. A straw or two added to the glass will make even a cold drink of milk taste better.

Orangeade.—Boil together one-half cupful of sugar and two and one-half cupsful of water with the rind of an orange, for five minutes. Chill, add two cupsful of orange juice, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and serve.

Ginger Ale Punch.—Pour one cupful of hot tea infusion over one cupful of sugar, add three-fourths of a cupful of orange juice, one-third cupful of lemon juice. One pint each of ginger ale and mineral or ice water. Serve with a few slices of orange and tea cookies.

Fried Cheese Toast.—Arrange sandwiches with a thin slice of cheese as filling between buttered slices of bread. Beat two eggs, add three-fourths of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt; dip the sandwiches into this mixture and brown in butter on both sides, in a hot frying pan. Serve with jelly.

TILDEN TO QUIT AT END OF YEAR

Big Bill Says He Is Playing His Last Season.

"The year 1929 sees the end of my international tennis," writes William T. Tilden II, nine times ranking tennis star of the United States and mainstay of American Davis cup teams since 1920, in Liberty.

Announcing his retirement from international competition, "Big Bill" states he will remain an amateur and continue to play tennis "as long as my two wobbling legs will function and my aged and enfeebled arm will swing, as long as my age-dimmed eyes can see a ball."

Davis cup competition will know no longer the smashing cannon-ball service and amazing all-around tennis of the greatest player of modern times. In the future, Tilden says, he will play as an individual, not as a member of any American team.

"I have had a grand time, but I must hereafter write and speak of my triumphs and failures in world tennis in the past tense, for I am through," the Philadelphia writes.

"Not through with the game, but through with international competition. My future status will continue to be amateur. I have no thought or intention of turning professional."

Tilden, who has been ranked No. 1 in American tennis since 1920, has had frequent squabbles with the United States Lawn Tennis association, and spent the winter of 1928-29 in involuntary retirement. He makes humorous, but rather dignified, reference to his differences with the U. S. L. T. A. in announcing his withdrawal from international competition.

"I hope to be able to play for years in exhibitions at schools and colleges or in public parks where I feel I am aiding in the development of our future champions."

"Not only have I no chance but I have no burning desire to sit in the seats of the mighty in the councils of the U. S. L. T. A. My views are at variance with the traditions of the association but not with its ethics. I fear I would want to see too much progressiveness and liberalism in its administration. I am for the players, first, last and all the time."

Allen Is Clever

Jockey C. E. Allen has had more than his share of success in riding winning horses on western tracks this year. His clever ride on Martinique landed the Quickstep handicap from a high class field of horses at Latonia recently.

Sport Notes

Great Britain boasts 100,000 women affiliated with golf clubs.

Penn State loses 38 letter winners in 12 varsity sports through graduation this year.

Warren Davis of Hoquiam, Wash., has been elected captain of the Washington university crew for 1930.

Lafayette, Lehigh and Rutgers, traditional rivals in all sports, recently banded together, and are to be known in the future as "The Middle Three" group.

Columbia crews, under the Glendons, have beaten crews of every college except Wisconsin. Wisconsin has been absent from varsity competition in recent years.

Roy Clifford, basket ball coach of Collinwood and developer of three championship teams, has been officially declared Western Reserve university cage mentor.

Now another record for the hundred yard dash has been set, but it is only a mark to shoot at. No record can be said to represent the permanent limit of human endeavor.

Fred Hoyde of Devils Lake, N. D., fleet quarterback of the University of Minnesota football team last fall has been named a Rhodes scholar to Oxford university, England.

Los Angeles has 15,000 members of private golf clubs, as many more of public or semipublic courses, a total of 3,447 acres of links; $50,000,000 in golf, polo, tennis and club houses.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

IN THE KITCHEN

"I'm not angry," said the kettle, "but I'm hurt. My poor porcelain feelings are most dreadfully hurt."

"Tell us all about it," said the frying pan. "We're interested to know, and it will make you feel better."

"Yes," said the water in the kettle, "tell your kitchen friends about it."

"They're used to being dropped and burnt and they don't mind much of anything."

"Tell them this story and they'll feel sorry for you, and will also cheer you up."

"You're becoming entirely too unhappy about this whole affair."

"Wouldn't you be unhappy if you had been accused of something that wasn't your fault?"

"I'm really to be sympathized with more than you. I was the guilty one," said the water, "although I am not really to blame."

"Please, please," called the frying pan.

"Yes," said the pancake turner, "don't talk among yourselves any more. Let us hear what it is all about."

"Go on with your story," said the water in the kettle. "The kitchen friends are weary of these delays."

"That's right, we are," agreed the frying pan.

"All right," said the kettle, "I'll tell you all about what has hurt my feelings, and I'm sure you will all agree with me that your feelings would be hurt too if you were in my place."

"We've often been in your place," said the frying pan. "We go on the stove too when the meals are being cooked."

"You've no special place. We're all shoved around wherever the cook wants to put us. So there!"

"I mean," said the kettle sadly, "that if you had been in my place regarding

"Tried to Move Me."

my feelings and not my position on the stove."

"Oh, our feelings have been hurt too," said the frying pan, and the pancake turner agreed.

"We're used to having all sorts of things happen to us."

"Let the kettle tell the story," said the water.

"Are you cool and calm now?" asked the kettle of the water.

"Quite cool," said the water. "But you mustn't blame me because I couldn't help being so hot. It was the fault of the fire."

"It made me get so warm and excited that I bubbled over."

"There! Now you're blaming me," said the fire. "I couldn't help it if they put sticks and coal and paper in me. They built me up so I would go."

"It's not our fault," said the sticks and coal and paper. "Without the match we couldn't have gone."

"Mean of you to blame our family," said another match. "The match couldn't have been lighted if the cook had not struck it on the side of the box."

"We still don't know what the trouble is," said the frying pan.

"Stop abusing each other and tell us."

"A child," said the kettle, "tried to move me, and in so doing some of the boiling water went over her."

"I wasn't quite boiling," said the water. "Very nearly, however."

"Don't interrupt," said the kettle. "You have caused me enough trouble."

"Well, the child was quite badly burned. It hurt awfully, for burns always do."

"Yes," said the butter, from the ice box in the corner of the kitchen. "She came to me to be comforted. Butter is excellent for burns."

"But she blamed me for burning her," said the kettle. "She said that 'the horrid old kettle' had burned her, and I wasn't to blame at all."

And the water, fire, paper, sticks, coal and match each said in turn they were not to blame but only the cook for starting the fire in the first place!

Heads and Tails

"Heads and Tails" comes as near being a romp as any Chinese game does. Several children take hold of each other's jacket in order to form what appears like the body of a fish. The first one in the line is the head, which is supposed to be too fierce to be captured. The last one is the tail, which is to be seized and eaten. One of the players stands alone, and suddenly begins to chase the fish, trying to catch its tail. Every time he makes a rush the head of the fish faces round, and the players forming the tail swing to one side to avoid being caught.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Foreign Students

In American universities and colleges during the current year there are 9,113 students from foreign countries. Over a hundred countries are represented, including such as Abyssinia, Afghanistan, Burma and Malta. Canada leads with 1,173, followed by China with 1,109. Columbia university has the most, with 873, while the universities of California, New York and Washington are close seconds. Harvard, Chicago and Michigan also have large foreign groups among their undergraduates.

TOOK ADVICE OF HER MOTHER

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wetmore, Colo.—"When I was married 14 years ago I was in bad health for a couple of years and when I tried to do anything I would get tired and worn-out. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound off and on all these years and have recommended it to hundreds of women. I have given birth to six children and have taken the Vegetable Compound as a tonic before child birth. It has done me worlds of good. My mother had taken it several times and she recommended it to me."

CAMP FIRE GIRLS FIGHT FOREST FIRE

Eighty Camp Fire Girls, appropriately dubbed "the middy blouse brigade" by state forest rangers, were singled out yesterday by State Forester M. B. Pratt for special commendation as a result of their success in combatting a fire which started in the timber belt near their Nevada county camp.

Mobilized as an emergency fire-fighting organization by Mrs. Hope Winkler, temporarily in charge during the absence of their camp supervisor, Miss Helena Silver, the eighty girls fought and conquered the blaze with "the weapons at hand," according to Pratt.

When State Ranger W. F. Sharp arrived on the scene, Pratt said, he found a bloomer-clad troop of girls beating out the final trace of fire with their middy blouses.

Eighty blackened blouses, and a scattered array of buckets and dish-pans testified as to the means employed in extinguishing the fire before it could spread from the pine needles to the brush and trees.

"These girls, by their willingness to tackle a hard job and ruin their clothes, have given new proof that Californians are becoming 'fire conscious' and real conservationists," affirmed the forester. "Women, in fact, seem to be awakening to a fine sense of responsibility for their outdoor playgrounds before the men."

"This story is in pleasing contrast to the one disclosed in another northern county, just recently, where our rangers found that a camper who allowed his camp-fire to escape had fled in such haste that he left his camp equipment and some of his clothes behind him."

THE SKIPPER COMES ASHORE

By James D. McCURE.
Released by National Automobile Club.

CHAPTER I—PART 14

One hundred yards offered sufficient headway for the "take off." The drone of the powerful motor was the only discernible sound as our Boeing air-mail plane rose above the ground and headed south towards the Siskiyou mountains.

The earth gradually slipped away from beneath us as Medford was left astern. Ahead lay a beautiful fertile valley through which the highway stretched as a silver ribbon. Soaring higher, single fields gave way to a patchwork of green and brown, with here and there a dense grove of timber, and with here and there a cluster of red-roofed farm buildings. A serpentine line of deep green betrayed the course of a small stream—too narrow to appear through its canopy of foliage. Farther on could be seen the mother stream—wide and green as it floated quietly through the level stretches of the valley floor; or narrow, gleaming with "white water," where it descended over a rocky bed.

Gradually the needle of our altimeter mounted as we sought the necessary altitude to carry us safely over the mountains. Thirty-five hundred feet allowed us to pass over the lower ranges of foothills. Five thousand feet enabled us to peer into deep canyons; their steep sides matted with a dense growth, the dark hue of pines and firs; their ridges spotted with stunted trees, reaching upwards through a blanket of gray-green brush, while here and there could be seen a protruding mass of clean-swept rock. At sixty-five hundred feet we skimmed over the summit and looked ahead at Mt. Shasta, rising like a white-robed sentinel on the far border of a sun-scorched valley.

What a contrast between the tree-shrouded northern slopes of the mountains and the arid region lying south. Trees vanished as the summit was crossed; low scrubby growth giving way to dry plains as we sailed over the lower levels. Directly below us the Shasta river rushed through its deep chasm, carved in fantastic form through the barren hills, its sides devoid of all visible growth.

Ahead, lying in miniature valleys surrounded by wart-like hills, could be seen many small lakes, each ringed with a border of glistening alkali, in turn framed by a swath of verdant green where the filtered waters reached underground to the grass-roots—the whole standing forth against the parched background of the surrounding landscape.

Climbing steadily, we passed the cinder cone on the side of Mt. Shasta at an elevation of some ten thousand feet, enjoying a wonderful vista of that snow-capped peak before dropping below the surface of a storm which we had observed gathering in the south. One moment we were sailing through the crystal-clear air, the next instant we were enveloped in a blanket of gray mist, completely obscuring all vision beyond the tips of the wings, across which the rain slithered in a thin film, gathering at the edge in large drops before falling into space.

A break in the clouds off our starboard bow permitted a momentary glimpse of a sheer wall of granite, its base and summit blending into the color scheme of the rain clouds—we were flying below the crest of the hills as we winged our way past the Castle Cargoes. A few moments more of sodden gray atmosphere and we burst suddenly forth into the glaring sunlight. Before us, except for an occasional group of fleecy clouds, there stretched an unbroken expanse of blue sky, while in the distance the mountains dwindled into hills and the hills flattened into the floor of the valley. Astern, the tip of Mt. Shasta stood forth above the cloud bank through which we had just passed. Below, the Sacramento river showed white and sparkling as it raced through its deep, forest lined gorge.

Well, sir, I'd been so wrapped up in new sensations and new interests that I'd entirely forgotten that I, an old shell-backed Skipper, had gotten both feet off the deck and was sailing southward with the air-mail, thanks to my having run across young Gilhauser, an air mail pilot and the son of an old deep-water man under whom I had sailed some twenty years ago.

CHAPTER I—PART 15

Leaving the mountains at Redding we flew low above the valley floor to avoid bucking a strong head-wind. Far to our left the high peaks of the Sierra Nevada were barely discernable through the blue heat-haze. To our right the Coast range, puny in comparison with the mountain wall to the east, appeared formidable because of their nearness. Ahead, the broad expanse of the Sacramento valley stretched away to the limits of our vision—close at hand a plain of red earth sparsely coated with a growth of sun-scorched grass, while in the distance could be seen a line of dark green marking the border of the fertile region lying south of Corning.

Following the ribbon of highway stretching in a straight line from north to south, and paralleled by two glistening steel rails over which a train moved at apparently a crawling speed, we were soon flying over such prosperous valley towns as Williams, Willows, Arbuckle, and Esparto—appearing as toy villages, their metallic-gray streets laid out with geometrical precision, their court house standing in true American fashion in a tree-shaded square, their yellow-walled, green-roofed railroad station easily distinguishable near the outskirts of the town. White houses, with roofs of green or red, were occasionally visible through the dense foliage of the tree-lined streets. Here and there could be seen the spire of a church, while, topping all, stood the tall black water tower, a landmark of all valley settlements.

With the town as a nucleus, a network of roads stretched in all directions, tapping the rich back-country of farms and orchards; serving as arteries through which the valley's riches might be collected for distribution to all parts of the world.

To a man with both feet on the ground, one hundred and sixty acres of land holds the enchantment of a small domain. To one viewing the world from above, such an area appears as a most unassuming portion of a vast region. However, looking over the entire extent of the fertile valley, one realizes the important part each small holding plays in making possible the veritable "Garden of Eden" drained by the Sacramento river.

Just south of Arbuckle we veered to the westward, heading over the Coast range in a direct line with Napa and the upper reaches of San Francisco bay. Rapidly climbing, we crossed the mountains at an elevation of some five thousand feet, looking down upon barren ridges and steep canyons. Napa soon appeared below us and then, dead ahead, the shimmering waters of the bay stretched the full length of the horizon, the hills on its farther shore appearing merely as a blur of darker hue.

In a few moments we were sailing directly above San Pablo bay, looking down upon the sun-dried mud flats of its northern shore, speckled with blotches of white salts and having all the appearance of a bald head after a bad attack of sun-burn. From the windows of our plane it was possible to distinguish the various depths of water through the variation of color—a dark blue for the greater depths, a pale green for the lesser, with here and there a streak of yellow-tan where a sand-bar lay close to the surface.

From a point above Angel Island, at an altitude of five thousand feet, we dropped with dizzy speed to a landing at Crissy Field, the army air field on the southern shore of the Golden Gate. Stopping just long enough to unload a portion of our mail cargo, we once more "took off," rising in a gentle arc above the Golden Gate, then, heading inland, we skimmed along the San Francisco water front, flew low above the boats plying the bay, skirted the southern shore of Alameda, and, in a few moments circled the Oakland airport, banked sharply, headed towards the earth, gliding to a perfect landing before the Boeing hangar—the air mail terminus.

Well, folks, I've had to cut short on the log of my air cruise in order to return to my trip over the Redwood highway. It was a wonderful experience for an old-timer like myself, familiar as I am with unusual adventures. Gilhauser, the pilot of the Boeing air mail plane in which I made my trip, is the son of a genuine deep-water man under whom I sailed some twenty years ago. The Old Man was a true Skipper of the "Clipper Ship" days, and his son is now carrying on equally well as a pilot in the service of carrying the air mail.

New ways for old.

-in banking
as in transportation!

THE World's progress in methods of transportation is one of the outstanding mechanical achievements of the past century. While the advancement in banking methods has been more gradual, there is however a new spirit manifest throughout the entire United States. Financial institutions in the principal centers of the nation have caught the step and are sweeping forward to broadened activities and greater usefulness. The advanced methods of the Bank of Italy—a 100% American institution—have changed the old order of banking and placed it on a basis as enterprising and progressive as our most modern industries. The Bank of Italy, because of the adoption of these new ideas for better public service, has been called "the most progressive bank in the world" by those who know.

Mrs. C. Scott, of Parkview avenue, her mother, Mrs. A. Stinson, of Oakland, and nephew, Maurice Stinson, motored to Boyes Springs on Tuesday of last week to meet Mrs. Scott's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Weatherall, of Oakland, who were returning from a motor trip to Yellowstone Park and Canada. Before returning home the group motored to Rio Vista, where they spent several days.

In the absence of the pastor at Grace Presbyterian church last Sunday evening, a very interesting service was held by the C. E. Society. President Miss Diehl, of the G. G. Union, gave a talk on the two conventions she had recently attended, one at San Bernardino, and one at Kansas City. The church was well filled, a number of young people from Berkeley being present. The services next Sunday evening will again be in charge of the young people.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank McDermott, of Templeton avenue, are receiving the sympathy of their many friends upon the death of Mr. McDermott's mother, Mrs. Mary McDermott, who passed away in Oakland on Wednesday of last week after a short illness. The death of Mrs. McDermott will be keenly felt by the members of American Legion Post James McDermott, of Tracy, who have dearly loved and honored her as Tracy's first "Gold Star" mother, her son James being the first boy from Tracy killed in the World war, the post being named in his honor.

GOVERNOR STUDYING MOONEY PARDON PLEA

Governor C. C. Young, returning Wednesday from his vacation in Southern California, indicated that his final decision in the Thomas J. Mooney case is not to be handed down for several weeks. He declared he had found the task of studying the numerous documents in the case a "tremendous job" and that he also is planning personal interviews with many persons associated with the case.

Not So Bad

A returned vacationist tells us he was fishing in a pond one day when a country boy who had been watching him from a distance approached him and asked: "How many fish yer got, mister?"

"None yet," he was told.

"Well, yer ain't doing so bad," said the youngster, "I know a feller what fished here for two weeks and he didn't get any more than you got in half an hour."

Now is the time to buy your winter Coal.

Macdonald: "And how's the world been treatin' you lately?" Macdougall: "Verra seldom, Mac; verra seldom."

Knocker

"So I said to her: 'Do you remember the boy that used to pull your pig tails at school?' and she said: 'Oh, was that you?' and I said: 'No, that was my father.'"

Butchers Give Them, Too

Wife: "John, I'm writing a paper on calendar reform for our club. Do you know which Pope gave us the present calendar?"

John: "Pope? Holy mackerel, I thought it came from the grocer!"

Kindling and Block Wood.

Your home is the best of all investments. There are no dividends to compare with comfort and contentment—no returns equal to the personal pride felt by the man who OWNS his home.

"See that girl there—hic? Well, she's a liar. She told me she had two brothers and one sister,—hic,—and I just asked her big brother, and he said he,—hic,—had only one brother and two sisters."

"STERLING, the Wallboard of satisfaction."

"Do fish perspire?" "Of course. Whadda you think makes the sea salty?"

There is no self-starter on the car of opportunity. You have to get out and crank it.
